

Giving Credit and Using Digital Content Correctly

Textbook

Giving Credit and Using Digital Content Correctly

Emma and Ava's Online Art Project

Emma and Ava were working on their class project about animals. Emma was creating a digital slideshow while Ava helped find pictures online.

"Look at this tiger photo!" Ava said, pointing to her screen. "It's perfect for our project!"

Emma started to drag the photo into their slideshow. "Wait," Ava said. "We need to give credit to whoever took this photo."

Emma paused. "What do you mean?"

"When we use someone's work, we should say who made it," Ava explained. "It's called giving credit."

Emma understood. "So we should add 'Photo by Nature Photographer Sarah M.' under the picture?"

"Exactly," Ava said. "That way people know who made it."

Their teacher, Ms. Rodriguez, walked by and saw their work. "Thanks for adding the credit line. That's the correct way to use online content."

Using Content the Right Way Online

Using content the right way online means:

- Following classroom and website rules
- Giving credit for others' work
- Asking before sharing someone else's work

- Avoiding unapproved copying or posting

Why Give Credit?

Giving credit means saying who made something if it isn't yours. We give credit to:

- Show who made the work
- Help others find the original creator
- Follow classroom and copyright rules

Types of Content That Need Credit

Always give credit for:

- Photos: Pictures taken by others
- Drawings: Artwork created by someone else
- Music: Songs or sound recordings
- Videos: Movies or animations
- Text: Stories, poems, or information
- Ideas: When someone helps you think of something

How to Give Credit

Simple credit formats:

- For photos: "Photo by [name]"
- For drawings: "Art by [name]"
- For websites: "From [website name]"
- For books: "From [book title] by [author]"
- For help: "Idea from [name]"

Asking Permission

Before using someone's work:

- Find who made it
- Ask if you can use it
- Wait for their answer
- Give credit if they say yes

Following Online Rules

Following online rules means:

- Using only your own work or work with permission
- Giving credit when required
- Not copying or posting without permission
- Reporting unsafe or incorrect use of content
- Following classroom expectations

Examples of Giving Credit the Right Way

Right Way:

- "Photo from NASA website"
- "Drawing by my classmate Maria"
- "Information from Kids Encyclopedia"

Wrong Way:

- Using pictures without saying who made them
- Copying someone's project
- Taking credit for others' work

Building Good Digital Habits

Good digital habits include:

- Checking who created content
- Adding credit lines when required
- Asking permission before using content
- Using your own work when possible
- Keeping track of where you found things

Following Digital Rules

- Uses their own work or gets permission
- Gives credit when required
- Follows copyright and classroom rules
- Uses online content correctly

Critical Thinking Questions

1. Why do we need to give credit when we use someone else's work?

2. What can happen if someone uses a picture without saying who made it?
3. How do you know if something needs a credit line?

Sentence Stems

- "I give credit by (blank space)."
- "Digital respect means (blank space)."
- "Before using someone's work, I (blank space)."
